- Ponente: Isabel Durán

The research situation in Spain, and in particular in the field of Humanities, has been, and is still characterized -if compared with other European countries-, by a deficient situation, not only in public funding and inversion in human resources dedicated to R & D, but also in terms of results, whether these are registered patents or scientific publications.

In this sense, we will provide data at both national and European levels, of the situation of the Complutense University of Madrid (UCM) in general R & D, while placing special attention on data concerning the Humanities, a field well known for being quite neglected in research discussions and project implementation. We will also give an overall view of the institutional UCM international research programs.

The idea is to present some facts and figures that lead to a discussion on how to improve our research results and position in the European ranks, both at the institutional and the national level.
